American and Foreign Governments. This nation has emerged so triumphantly from the severe trials to which it has recently been subjected, that all doubts in regard to the perpetuity of republicanism should be forever dismissed.

The peace people declare that "it is cheaper to feed than to fight them, and more humane to love than to hate them." In this abstract idea we heartily concur. But when we are compelled, as at present, both to feed and to fight them, the question of the comparative cheapness of the two policies is quite immaterial.

"Let us have peace!" when there is no peace, and can be no peace, either in the Indian country or among nations claiming to be civilized, until the causes of war are themselves removed, is the sheerest nonsense.

The "Hand-in-Hand" Business. The great gathering at the up-town Wigwam in this city, during the month of August, 1868, was inaugurated by Massachusetts and South Carolina entering the building "arm in arm."

"Let Us Have Peace!" Tax Pennsylvania Peace Society held their annual meeting in this city last week. The society is as insignificant in point of numbers as it is impracticable in its ideas.

barities and inhumanity of war in the most vivid coloring, and to lament the fact that, while their annual contributions towards the cause of universal peace seldom exceed $150, the warlike budget of each of the great powers of the world is counted by millions.

The most noticeable action taken by these eccentric advocates of a state of affairs which will be utterly impossible for centuries to come was upon the Indian question. A memorial to Congress was adopted, eulogizing the "noble Red Man," recounting the wrongs which he has suffered at the hands of his pale-faced brethren, and demanding that a radical change of our Indian policy shall be immediately inaugurated.

was, to all intents and purposes, merely an attempt to revive the Rebellion under a new and less obnoxious name. If the "hand-in-hand" experiment is to be continued as it has been begun in Louisiana and some other Southern States, it will fail likewise.

The experiment is to be continued in this fashion, we repeat that it will fail—that it must fail. The platform on which General Grant was carried into the Presidential chair was the platform of "Peace," and that platform can be inaugurated only by a prompt and summary termination of the system of persecution and proscription which, under the auspices of the Hampton-Democracy, has made a negro's life in the Southern States worth less to him and to the country than the life of an unclean beast.

A Suicidal Indian Policy. The New York Times proposes what it doubtless regards as a complete and satisfactory solution of the vexatious Indian question. "To make our westward course among the poor aborigines more easy, effective, and creditable to ourselves," says the Times, "we should use those Indian chiefs as our paid officers, wearing our colors at the head of their own native regiments, doing our work, and becoming good citizens in process of time."

This parallel, however, we are inclined to regard as a weak one. The difference between the customs and national idiosyncracies of the English and the Highlanders was comparatively insignificant, in comparison with that which exists between the whites and the Indians of this country.

The sooner this fact is recognized in all projected reforms of our Indian policy, the better will it be for both races. The universal arming of the Indian tribes might secure their favor for a time, but so soon as their real or imaginary grievances should get the better of their vain love of show and intense passion for pomp and parade, the old conflict would be resumed, on a better footing, as far as the Indians are concerned, than ever in the past.

of their warfare upon the whites and among themselves. Lieutenant-General Sherman, in his recent report recounting the outrages perpetrated by the savages during the past four months, regards this transfer of the Indian Bureau as an indispensable measure, and the only way in which the recommendations of the Peace Commissioners can be effectually carried out.

Murder. This city was startled this morning by the intelligence that a most foul murder had been committed last evening, at the northeast corner of Tenth and Pine streets. The utmost excitement now prevails on the subject, and the scene of the terrible deed has been visited by a throng of people during the morning anxious to learn all the particulars.
